This box receives the roll of blue print paper. The lid has a steel straightedge to guide the knife in cutting. Fig. 3 illustrates the design. Fig. 3. Cutting Table. The roll from which the paper is to be cut is placed in the box, as shown, and the lid closed. The paper is then drawn out to the desired length, corresponding to that indicated by the scale at the front of the table and the cross-ruling. A sharp knife drawn along the steel straight-edge cuts off the paper; The handling of the blue print paper is greatly facilitated by the use of this simple contrivance. It can be quickly and accurately cut to the desired size, which makes it possible to use narrow margins beyond the tracing, and results in an economy in paper. The unused roll is...
